Administrative Rule: Student Email

Written By: Jim Jones

Date: February 28, 2007

Student email use at Stanley-Boyd Area Schools is considered a privilege, not a right. It is difficult to monitor email for inappropriate content and it can be abused to the point of causing an unnecessary distraction to our students. Therefore, this district will provide email accounts to students on an individual basis, upon request of a teacher, counselor, or administrator. Students will primarily use email in their junior or senior year.

Student email accounts will be created at the web site www.gaggle.net. Gaggle does not allow students to sign up for accounts. A student Gaggle account must be created by a registered school district email administrator. The administrator can control all facets of a student's account, including the ability to read any incoming or outgoing messages. Gaggle filters all text for key words that may indicate inappropriate use. When questionable text is found in an email, the email is automatically diverted to the administrator's mailbox for review.

Students will be required to sign an Email Acceptable Use Policy before using Gaggle email. They agree to have their email routinely read by the administrator before signing the AUP and before their Gaggle account is activated. Anyone in violation of the AUP will be placed on the school step system and will have their account either suspended or revoked, based on the judgment of the school administrator.
